

Jeremy Bikman

Diebold Healthcare Advisory Board Member

Throughout his career, Jeremy Bikman has been leading strategy and business development efforts for market research, consulting and software firms. He is currently the CEO of start-up PeerIntel, which is developing mobile applications to enable peer-to-peer executive exchanges of information and is the Chairman of KATALUS Advisors a global healthcare strategic advisory firm.

Previously, he was the executive vice president of research, strategy and business development for KLAS Enterprises, the leading healthcare technology market research firm. He was also the founder and managing partner at KATALUS Consulting, where he led efforts in consulting services for clients ranging from NASDAQ firms to technology start-ups. During his years as an account manager at MRI, he exceeded quota by more than 300 percent and received nearly every national and regional production award including Rookie of the Year and Regional Top 10 Account Executive of the Year.

In addition to serving on Diebold's healthcare advisory board, Jeremy also sits on the board of healthcare technology start-up MedSocket and on the board of Survey Analytics which provides industry leading market research software tools.

Jeremy has a BA in Economics, with a Political Science minor, from Brigham Young University. He spent two years, from 1989-91, doing full-time religious and community volunteer work in Southern California.